LAW INTELLIGENCE.

SUPREME COURT.—Equity Junisdiction. BEFORE His Honor Mr. Justice a BECKETT. BROWN AND OTHERS F. NORTON AND OTHERS.
His Honor delivered judgment in this case the agreement between Mossman and Hughes and Hosking, as set out in the bill, and the documents signed in pursuance; but says, that after the execution of the agreement of the 29th November, 1828, divers deeds relating to the title of the said J. T. Hughes and J. Hosking, to the properties therein respectively mentioned, were handed to him as the solicitor of the said A. Mossman, not as such security, as in the said bill in that behalf mentioned; but for the purpose of his preparing a security for the said annuity; and that, at various periods afterwards, and up to the time of his ceasing to act as the solicitor of A. Mossman, continual changes were made by the said Hughes and Hosking, and with the gonern of the said annuity was to be secured; and that the frequency of such changes and substitutions renders it impossible for him to set forth with certainty, or to remember, what were the parties or not. The cases cited, therefore, on the subject of incomplete agreements, due to the said the solicitor of A. Mossman, in the properties upon which the said annuity was to be secured; and that the frequency of such changes and substitutions renders it impossible for him to set forth with certainty, or to remember, what were the parties or not. The cases cited, therefore, on the subject of incomplete agreements, but are sets performed to first agreement, but are sets performed in carrying that agreement, but are sets performed in carrying that agreement, but are sets performed out. This distinction is well established in equity, and will be found to carrying that agreement, but are sets performed out. This distinction of the said savel savel series agreement, but are sets performed out. This distinction of the said down and acted upon in Ph And the form the former and the contract of th

Before touching the question of notice, I will consider the case as it would have stood between Hughes and Hosking and Mosman, on a bill filed by the latter previous to the date of the first conveyance to the Bank, for the purpose of obtaining security for his annuity, on the properties set out in the bill as accepted by him for that purpose. In forming my opinion upon this point, I shall look simply to the written agreement, and the acts done in pursuance of it; omitting, for the present, any view of the transaction as a mere deposit of deeds, and seeing, whether, independently of their rights on that ground, the plaintiffs would not have been entitled, as between Mossman and Hughes and Hoaking, to call for a conveyance of the securities now sought from the Bank.

With respect to the annuity, it was admitted by the counsel for the Bank, that the land sold by Mossman would be chargeable with it, on the suthority of the case cited by Mr. Donnelly, of Remington v. Devereux, 2 Anstr. 550; but it was considered the researched that the same case also aboved.

by Mossman would be chargeable with it, on the authority of the case cited by Mr. Donnelly, of Remington v. Devereux, 2 Anstr. 559; but it was contended that the same case also showed, that no other security could be claimed. In that case an agreement had been made for the purchase of a freehold estate for £100, and an annuity for the life of the vendor; but it was not specified how it was to be secured; and the defendant, the vendee, having offered his bond and judgment as sufficient, the Court decided that it should be secured by being charged upon the freehold estate; as well as by the bond and judgment of the defendant. In point of fact, therefore, the Court did not contine the security to the property held, but decreed something more. But in that case, or in any other where the property held consisted solely of land, the best and most appropriate security would be that of the land itself: for in the absence of fraud, the vendor could scarcely say that it was not worth that for which he himself had sold it. But in the present case, the land forms but a portion of the property sold, and by no means the most valuable portion; for the agreement includes two whaling ships, with their cargoes of oil; a large quantity of stock and cattle, with a variety of other chattel property, of obviously far greater value than would be covered by the sum agreed to be with their cargoes of oil; a large quantity of stock and cattle, with a variety of other chattel property, of obviously far greater value than would be covered by the sum agreed to be taken in bills. To contine, therefore, the secunity for the annuity to the landonly, would not only be an injustice to the vendor, but would not be in accordance with the course pursued by the Court in Remington v. Devereux, where, as I. sefore pointed out, the shole subject of sale was made the subject also of security.

But looking to the wording of the agreement alone, I think this case is distinguishable from the one cited. As I read the agreement, there is not only a stipulation for security, but one which by necessary implication includes something more than the land purchased. This part of the consideration is expressed by the words—"an annuity approved," which I take to be equivalent to the following: "An annuity secured on such property as Mossman should approve." If it does not mean this, it means nothing. For, the sum being fixed, there could be no property to approve but the securities: there could be no property to approve that there could be no property of them, but Mossman.

This view of the agreement dispose of the best of the the security and the property as the consideration that the securities is that the securities is that the securities is the securities.

"Your obedient servants,
"HUGHES AND HOSKING."
Shortly after the date of this letter, deeds were deposited with Mr. Norton by Mr. Hughes agent, for the purposes of the security; and sithough there is no direct evidence that they related to the properties named in the letter, I have no doubt, from the subsequent letters, and the evidence of Mr. Thompson and Mr. Pollard, that such was the fact. On the 15th October, in the same year, Messra Hughes and Hosking again wrote to Mr. Mossman, proposing to substitute certain other speman, proposing to substitute certain other spe-cified property in lieu of that at Port Phillip, mentioned in their preceding letter. Upon this Mr. Mossman thus writes to Mr. Nor-

"Sydney, 31st October, 1839.
"James Norton, Esq.
"Dear Sir, —Messre. Hughes and Hosking having applied to me for the deeds of 6000, six thousand acres of land at Port Philip, I have consented to relinquish this portion, they having sold the same to a Mr. Cameron.

"Previous to the deeds of the above land being given up by me, they have pledged themselves to substitute other property as security. to my satisfaction.

"I am your obedient servant,
"AKCHBALD MOSSMAN."
On the 1st November, Mr. Mossman again writes to Mr. Norton, enclosing him a copy of Hughes and Hosking's letter of the 7th February, specifying the securities therein proposed, inquiring which, if any of them, had not been deposited with Mr. Norton, expressing his willingness to give up the Port Phillip securities for others equally satisfactory; and concluding thus, "of course you will not deliver up any of "the securities now in your possession, with-"out my written suthority to that effect." On the 18th of the same month, he wrote to the same effect—again specifying at the foot of his letter, the securities originally offered, and requesting to be sent a list of the securities left in substitution of the Port Phillip property. On the same letter, Mr. Norton returns this answer:—
"Dear Sir,—All the securities mentioned at the foot of your letter, are now in my hands.

cember, Hughes and Hosking thus write to him:

"Archibald Mossman, Esq., Sydney.

"Sydney, December 9, 1839.

"Dear Sir.—Your communinication respecting the withdrawal of the residue of the Port Phillip securities, under a satisfactory substitution of other and tangible property, was explained to us this afternoon by Mr. Pollard, from whom we collect that you will be satisfied with our written pledge that those conditions will be satisfied in all January, &c, &c.

and have been speaking of the arangement contained in the letters, or of a list unsigned by either party, and the evidence of the letter is far too loose to be taken, as referring to any particular document. Mr. Mossman does not say that he signed any paper so as to constitute as that he signed any paper so as to constitute as original: though the copy given in evidence bears his signature. I think, therefore, I cannot reat these copies as secondary evidence of any other document, if any other existed, but of that it appears to me there is not sufficient proof. I see no reason, however, why I may not receive these copies, in connection with the other documents, as evidence of that to which Mossman actually assented; and when I find that the properties agreed upon from the first, as to which there can be no doubt whatother document, if any other existed, but of that it appears to me there is not sufficient proof. I see no reason, however, why I may not receive these copies, in connection with the other documents, as evidence of that to which Mossman actually assented; and when I find that the properties therein mentioned are those actually conveyed to Mossman, and, most of them the properties agreed upon from the first, as to which there can be no doubt whatever, I think I may conclude that they were the same securities as those which Hughes and Hosking actually proposed. It is true that the deed by which these securities are conveyed, is subsequent to those to the Hank, and cannot therefore by any of its contents affect the rights of the parties to Mossman actually assented; and when I find that the properties therein mentioned are those that the properties agreed upon from the first, as to which there can be no doubt what ever, I think I may conclude that they were the same securities as those which Hughes and Hosking actually proposed, it is true that the deed by which these securities are conveyed; is subsequent to those to the Hank, and cannot therefore by any of its contents affect the rights of the parties to the latter; but I do not allow it any such doperation. I only resort to it as evidence of the prior arrangement between Mossman and Hughes and Hosking, and when it is proved that no change took place in the securities after the 10th January, 1842, and that within a short period before that day, the greater part is included; it seems to me that the conveyance of all the securities mentioned in that list, by the deed of August, 1843, though subsequent to that of the Bank, is no slight evisit on the trust of the security to be given for the annuity, ease not depend upon any proposite in that of the Bank, is no slight evisit on the terms of the contract, by which the right of selectionis stipulated to be exercised by himself, whether any proposite in on particular securities between the parties are security to be given for the annuity, does not depend upon any proposite to one particular securities between the parties of a first is notice to design the subscience of security altogether by simply declining to propose any. This shows that the question of securities between the parties of a first is notice to the subject of agreement, in the scane required by the their yendor of security, is to see whether any proposition has, in point of fact, been any proposition has, in point of fact, been that ground alone claim a right of withdrawal from that particular proposition—far less deny their liability to give any security at all.

The question, however, still arises, whether the securities in question were so clearly marked, as to lead to a knowledge of their appropriation, by third parties entering into a subsequent agreement for their purchase. The plaintiffs charge the Bank with notice in two ways:—lst. constructively through the actual knowledge of Mr. Norton's knowledge, let us first the effect of Mr. Norton's knowledge, let us first see to what it amounts; and first, I cannot to may have been left as to the securities to be given for the annuity, prior to the 19th January, 1842; he was on that day, made acquainted with the specific properties, which is client had accepted for that purpose. It is clear too, that the deeds of many, if not of all—for the purpose of the annuity; and he must have been aware that at the date of the deed to the Bank, those deeds were still in his hands, and that the conveyance of the many they were intended to secure, yet te

The Juno is propelled by two engines, of what she was when first sent to sea.

The attention of parties acting for Government, Capitalists, Public Companies, and others, cannot be too strongly directed to the opportunity for the safe and adviscable investment of money which this sale presents, nor can the fact be lost sight of that in addition to the increasing necessity for steam communication betwirt the different ports of these colonies at no distant period, a steam communication betwirt the different ports of these colonies at no distant period, a steam communication with Singapore, or some other port en route to India, of which it is understood to be a part of the duties of the Post Office Commissioners at present in this country to adjust the preliminaries, must greatly enhance the value of steam ships in this part of the world: for this line, or indeed for any sea-going purpose, the Juno stands unrivalled.
